MASSACHUSETTS BAR ASSOCIATION
REPORT TO THE HOUSE OF DELEGATES

ADOPTED AS REVISED

RESOLUTION

1 RESOLVED, That the American Bar Association, which supports the
2 independence of the judiciary and the legal profession and opposes any ~~Nation's~~ state's
3 detention of individuals without charge or access to counsel, calls upon the ~~G~~government
4 of the Republic of Turkey to:

- 5
- 6 (1) immediately release each detained judge, lawyer, prosecutor, journalist and any 7 other individual unless there is evidence establishing reasonable grounds to
8 believe that the individual has committed a crime;
- 10 (2) meet its obligations to protect human rights, to respect the prohibition against 11 torture, to respect freedom of speech and of the press, and to ensure that any 12 measures taken during the declared state of emergency including the seizure of 13 assets of detained individuals derogate from those obligations only to the extent
14 that the exigencies of the situation absolutely require;
15
- 16 (3) provide a fair hearing before an impartial tribunal applying established legal 17 principles before suspending or dismissing any judge from the bench or any 18 lawyer from the bar and adhere to international standards concerning the 19 independence of judges and lawyers;
20
- 21 (4) fully inform the Secretary General of the Council of Europe of each measure
22 that it has taken in derogation of the European Convention on Human Rights,
23 including the reasons for each such measure; and 24
- 25 (5) fully inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations of each measure that 26 it has taken in derogation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political
27 Rights, including the reasons for each such measure and the date on which it
28 ceases the measure.

REPORT¹

Background

On July 15, 2016, a small group of officers of Turkey's military reportedly declared martial law and attempted to overthrow the government of President Recep Tayyip Erdogan.² Reports of the attempted coup indicate that it was put down within approximately 10-12 hours and that some 260 people were killed and 1,400 wounded.³ Turkish officials accused a "Fethullah Gulen Movement" of being behind the coup.⁴ Fethullah Gulen, who formerly was closely associated with President Erdogan, has denied any involvement.⁵ Gulen is currently living in Pennsylvania.⁶

Within hours of the reported failed coup, the Turkish High Council for Judges and Prosecutors had suspended a reported 2,745 judges and prosecutors (comprising approximately twenty percent of the entire judiciary) of their functions.⁷ Hundreds of arrest warrants immediately issued, resulting in the arrest of many hundreds of judges and prosecutors within just the first few days.⁸ Within hours after the attempted coup had been put down, it was that, in addition to these 2,745 members of the judiciary, 2 members of the Constitutional Court, 140 members of the Court of Appeals and 48

judicial members of the Council of State had also been ordered detained.⁹ Shortly thereafter, 16 Reporters of the Constitutional Court were also ordered detained.¹⁰

On July 20, 2016, the Turkish government issued a decree announcing a state of emergency.¹¹ On July 21, 2016 the Secretary General of the Council of Europe was informed by the Turkish authorities¹² of Turkey's intent to derogate from the European Convention on Human Rights, pursuant to Article 15 of the Convention.¹³

By July 24, 2015, Amnesty International had gathered credible information that more than 10,000 people had been detained and that some of the detainees were being tortured.¹⁴ The targets appear primarily to be senior military officers, who are being subjected to beatings and other mistreatment, including rape.¹⁵

Mass Detention Without Meaningful Access To Counsel

It appears that as of July 30, 2016, approximately 12,096 persons have been arrested, including some 1,214 judges and prosecutors.¹⁶ Beyond the 1,214 who have been formally arrested, as of July 31, 2016, some 3,049 judges and prosecutors have been detained.¹⁷ The Justice Ministry has announced plans to appoint a total of 5,110 new judges and prosecutors next month, in order to reduce disruptions in judicial processes.¹⁸ Additionally, the chief prosecutor in Ankara has demanded that the assets of the 3,049 detained judges and prosecutors (including all vehicles, bank accounts, assets in safe deposit boxes, etc.) be “frozen.”¹⁹ Also, at least 89 arrest warrants have issued for journalists and more than 40 journalists have been detained.²⁰

There are credible reports concerning the detainees’ lack of access to defense counsel. Amnesty International investigators interviewed more than 10 Turkish lawyers, working to represent over one hundred suspected coup sympathizers in both Ankara and Istanbul, who gave information about the conditions of their clients’ confinement.²¹ The lawyers represented up to 18 detainees each, including many soldiers and judges, prosecutors, police, and other civil servants.²² These attorneys reported that almost without exception “their clients were being held incommunicado ... and had not been able to inform their families of where they were or what was happening to them.”²³ The detainees “were not able to phone a lawyer and in most cases did not see their lawyers until shortly before being brought to court or being interrogated by prosecutors.”²⁴ The practice of the interrogators is not to inform counsel or their lawyers of any specific charges for which the detainees ostensibly have been arrested.²⁵ Soldier detainees reportedly “were brought to court in groups as large as 20 and 25 people.”²⁶ Private lawyers are “not allowed to represent detainees,” who were all assigned bar association legal aid lawyers, who reported that “after the hearings they were not allowed to speak to their clients who were remanded in pre-trial detention.”²⁷

The right to counsel is guaranteed under Article 14 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (“ICCPR”) ²⁸ as well as under the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (“European Convention on Human Rights” or “ECHR”),²⁹ both of which Turkey has ratified.

It is well-understood that access to effective counsel is most critical in declared or undeclared states of emergency, which give rise to serious human rights violations such as arbitrary detention, torture and ill-treatment, enforced disappearance, denial of the right to challenge in court the legality of a detention, denial of the right to be tried by an independent court, unfair trials and attacks on freedom of expression and association.³⁰ Just as an independent judiciary is critical to safeguard against arbitrary detention and other such human rights violations, the role of the lawyer in such a crisis is paramount. Anyone who is detained has a right to be informed immediately of the reason for his detention and of his rights, in particular the right to the assistance of legal counsel.³¹ International law “also establishes that all persons detained under suspicion of a criminal offence have a right to legal assistance before trial [and] If they are unable to afford a legal counsel of their own choosing, they must have a right to competent and effective legal aid free of charge.”³² “Furthermore, detainees are entitled to have adequate time and facilities to communicate confidentially with their lawyers.”³³

The Turkish detainees have evidently enjoyed none of these basic protections, despite clear and well-established international standards, such as have been mentioned and such as are set out in the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, concerning requisite guarantees governments are expected to provide to ensure the proper functioning of lawyers.³⁴

The Mass Sackings Of Thousands Of Turkish Judges Violate Established Standards On Judicial Independence

²⁹ Article 6, paragraph 3 of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms provides, “Everyone charged with a criminal offence has the following minimum rights: (a) to be informed promptly, in a language which he understands and in detail, of the nature and cause of the accusation against him; (b) to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence; and (c) to defend himself in person or through legal assistance of his own choosing....”

³⁴ Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, paras. 16-22, Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, at <http://www.ohchr.org/EN/ProfessionalInterest/Pages/RoleOfLawyers.aspx>.

Under paragraphs 17 and 18 of the "Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary," endorsed in 1985 by the United Nations General Assembly, judges shall be suspended or removed only after "a fair hearing," and "only for reasons of incapacity or behaviour that renders them unfit to discharge their duties."³⁵ Paragraph 20 of the "Basic Principles" provides that all "disciplinary, suspension or removal proceedings should be subject to an independent review."³⁶

There is no question but that the suspensions of the judges, which occurred within hours of the failed coup, was ordered without an opportunity for a hearing, for reasons unrelated to the individual judges' capacity and without any showing that any judge was involved with the attempted coup.³⁷

ABA 2008 Midyear Meeting Resolution 10D was adopted during a crisis in another country in which numerous judges were removed from office, detained and arrested.³⁸ In Resolution 10D, in recognition of the critical importance of an independent judiciary to a legitimate constitutional democracy, the Association resolved the judges should be reinstated and that all judges, lawyers and other people who were wrongly arrested during the state of emergency be released.³⁹

As Kathryn Grant Madigan, then President of the New York State Bar Association, wrote in the (similarly) late-filed Report that accompanied the Resolution presented by the New York State Bar Association in 2008:

...it is essential that the American Bar Association's governing body, its House of Delegates, express its support for the rule of law ... , including ... the reinstatement of Supreme Court justices and high court judges who were removed from office, and the release of those wrongfully detained.

The rule of law is essential to the effective functioning of a free and democratic society; chaos and instability result from its absence. Crucial to the rule of law is a free and independent judiciary. Judges should never be subject to detention because of fears about their potential rulings....⁴⁰

This resolution is also consistent with other ABA policy. In ABA 2007 Annual Meeting Resolution 110D, the Association adopted the Principles on Judicial Independence and Fair and Impartial Courts, which among other things expresses the principle of institutional independence, a principle that “recognizes the judiciary as a separate and co-equal branch of government charged with administering justice pursuant to the rule of law, and as a constitutional partner with the executive and legislative branches authorized to manage its own internal operations without undue interference from the other branches.”⁴¹

Several highly respected professional associations have expressed grave concern about,⁴² or have condemned,⁴³ the arbitrary mass removal of the Turkish judges. It appears that the mass suspensions of judges, without any opportunity for a hearing, without any mechanism for independent review, and in the absence of any suggestion of any unfitness or lack of capacity, clearly violates established international standards on the independence of the judiciary.

The Association accordingly should call upon the Turkish Government to respect international legal standards concerning the independence of lawyers and judges and to provide a fair hearing before an impartial tribunal applying established legal principles before suspending or dismissing any lawyer or judge from the bar or a tribunal.

The Mass Detentions Violate Many Basic Principles Of Human Rights Law

A. The European Convention on Human Rights

It is true that Turkey has given notice of its derogation from the principles of Human Rights protected by the European Convention on Human Rights. But the right of a State to derogate from its obligations under the convention is not absolute, meaning that a State may not abrogate certain basic protections under any circumstances.⁴⁴ The right to be free from torture is one of those “non-derogable” rights and this right apparently has been violated in the case of certain detainees.

⁴⁴ In particular, Article 15, Section 2 of the Convention provides that the right to be free from torture, guaranteed under Article 3 of the Convention, shall never be derogated. Council of Europe, European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, as amended by Protocols Nos. 11 and 14, 4 November 1950, ETS 5, (“ECHR”) available at: <http://www.refworld.org/docid/3ae6b3b04.html>.

Additionally, mass detentions where individuals are systematically not being informed of charges or given meaningful recourse to habeas corpus constitute violations of the European Convention on Human Rights, to the extent that these practices are not “strictly required by the exigencies of the situation,” under Article 15, Section 1.”^{45 46 47}

Also, Turkey has decreed blanket impunity with respect to whatever human rights violations related to the purge may take place under the current state of emergency,⁴⁸ which again, to the extent that this decree is not “strictly required by the exigencies of the situation,” under Article 15, Section 1, contravenes Article 5, Section 5 of the ECHR.⁴⁹

B. The View Of The Commissioner for Human Rights

The Commissioner for Human Rights for the Council of Europe has pointed out, the sheer length of these detentions (as evidently is being contemplated pursuant to the 30 day declaration of state of emergency) is on its face inconsistent with rulings of European Court of Human Rights (“the ECtHR”) interpreting the ECHR.⁵⁰

I consider that the aforementioned Decree contains several other aspects that raise very serious questions of compatibility with the ECHR and rule of law principles, even taking into account the derogation in place:

⁴⁵ ECHR Article 15, Section 1 states, in relevant part, “In time of war or other public emergency threatening the life of the nation any High Contracting Party may take measures derogating from its obligations under this Convention to the extent strictly required by the exigencies of the situation, provided that such measures are not inconsistent with its other obligations under international law.” (emphasis added).

⁴⁶ Article 5 of the ECHR provides for the right to be informed of the charges for which one is being detained ECHR. “Everyone who is arrested shall be informed promptly, in a language which he understands, of the reasons for his arrest and of any charge against him.” Available at: <http://www.refworld.org/docid/3ae6b3b04.html>.

⁴⁷ As for the right of habeas corpus, ECHR Article 5, Section 4 provides, “Everyone who is deprived of his liberty by arrest or detention shall be entitled to take proceedings by which the lawfulness of his detention shall be decided speedily by a court and his release ordered if the detention is not lawful.” Available at: <http://www.refworld.org/docid/3ae6b3b04.html>.

⁴⁸ See Decree “Bakanlar Kurulu Kararı,” (number: 2016/9064), dated 20 July 2016.

⁴⁹ ECHR Article 5, Section 4 provides, “Everyone who has been the victim of arrest or detention in contravention of the provisions of this Article shall have an enforceable right to compensation.” Available at: <http://www.refworld.org/docid/3ae6b3b04.html>.

⁵⁰ Statement: “Measures Taken Under the State of Emergency in Turkey” Council of Europe, Strasbourg, July 27, 2016, <https://www.coe.int/et/web/commissioner/-/measures-taken-under-the-state-of-emergency-in-turkey>, citing Aksoy v. Turkey, ECtHR, December 18, 1996 (fourteen day period of detention was not necessitated by the exigencies of the situation, and left persons vulnerable to arbitrary interference with their right to liberty and freedom from torture).

Restrictions to the right of access to a lawyer, including the confidentiality of the client-lawyer relationship for persons in detention, which could affect the very substance of the right to a fair trial, and restrictions to visitation rights (Article 6);

The scope of the Decree, which concerns not only the coup attempt, but the fight against terrorism in general; both for physical and legal persons, punishments foreseen in the Decree apply not only in cases of membership or belonging to a terrorist organisation, but also for contacts with such an organisation (Articles 1, 2, 3 and 4);

Simplified procedures to dismiss judges, including judges of the Constitutional Court and Supreme Courts, without any specified evidentiary requirements (Article 3);

The immediate closure of 1,125 associations, 104 foundations, 19 trade unions, 15 universities, 934 private schools, and 35 private medical establishments. I note that it is not the activities of these bodies that are suspended or placed under trustee control: they are disbanded and their assets revert automatically to state authorities. The Decree further provides a simplified administrative procedure for the disbanding of further organisations (Article 2);

A simplified administrative procedure to terminate the employment of any public employee (including workers), with no administrative appeal and no evidentiary requirements (Article 4);

Automatic cancellation of passports of persons being investigated or prosecuted, without court order (Article 5);

Cancellation of rental leases between public bodies and persons considered to be a member of or in contact with a terrorist organisation, a measure that is likely to affect not only the suspects but also their families (Article 8).

Another worrying feature of the Decree is that it foresees complete legal, administrative, criminal and financial impunity for administrative authorities acting within its framework (Article 9) and the fact that administrative courts will not have the power to stay the execution of any of these measures (Article 10), even if they consider that such measures are unlawful. These two provisions effectively remove the two main safeguards against the arbitrary application of the Decree.

In my view, given the extremely broad and simplified procedures, arbitrariness is in all likelihood unavoidable and damages caused to any physical or legal person may therefore be irrevocable. Such urgency and derogation from ordinary guarantees of due process might be *necessary for certain groups, for example for military personnel in the light of the shocking events of 15 July, but perhaps not for others.*⁵¹

C. Human Rights Violations Under The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights

Article 9 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (“ICCPR” or “the Covenant”) also provides protections that, evidently, are all being disregarded in the current state of emergency.⁵² Turkey furthermore appears to be in violation of certain provisions of Article 14 of the Covenant as well.⁵³ In particular, the circumstances of detention, and the concomitant denial of meaningful access to counsel, contravene the provisions of ICCPR concerning arbitrary detention and unlawful confinement, notice of the reasons for arrest and charges and the right of habeas corpus.⁵⁴

⁵¹ Id., (emphasis added) available at <https://www.coe.int/et/web/commissioner/-/measures-taken-under-the-state-of-emergency-in-turkey>.

⁵² Article 9 of The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, available at <http://www.ohchr.org/EN/ProfessionalInterest/Pages/CCPR.aspx>, provides, in part:

1. Everyone has the right to liberty and security of person. No one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest or detention. No one shall be deprived of his liberty except on such grounds and in accordance with such procedure as are established by law.
2. Anyone who is arrested shall be informed, at the time of arrest, of the reasons for his arrest and shall be promptly informed of any charges against him.
3. ... It shall not be the general rule that persons awaiting trial shall be detained in custody, but release may be subject to guarantees to appear for trial, at any other stage of the judicial proceedings, and, should occasion arise, for execution of the judgement.
4. Anyone who is deprived of his liberty by arrest or detention shall be entitled to take proceedings before a court, in order that that court may decide without delay on the lawfulness of his detention and order his release if the detention is not lawful.
5. Anyone who has been the victim of unlawful arrest or detention shall have an enforceable right to compensation.

⁵³ Specifically, ICCPR Article 14, paragraph 3, sections (a), (b) and (d), provide the following protections:

3. In the determination of any criminal charge against him, everyone shall be entitled to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality:
 - (a) To be informed promptly and in detail in a language which he understands of the nature and cause of the charge against him;
 - (b) To have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence and to communicate with counsel of his own choosing; and
 - (d) To be tried in his presence, and to defend himself in person or through legal assistance of his own choosing....

10B

It is worth observing here, as the UN Special Rapporteur on Torture has observed, that judges, prosecutors and lawyers are especially vulnerable to ICCPR Article 9 and 14 abuses.⁵⁵ Those who work in the judicial system are at risk or face situations that result in violations of their human rights, especially in the face of governmental pressure.⁵⁶ According to the Special Rapporteur, these situations consist mainly of harassment, intimidation, vilification and threats, but may include enforced disappearances, assassinations or summary executions of judges, prosecutors or lawyers, simply because they are doing their jobs.⁵⁷

Additionally, with respect to incommunicado detention -- status quo in the mass detentions that are presently ongoing in Turkey -- the Special Rapporteur has repeatedly called for this practice to be declared illegal.⁵⁸ The United Nations Human Rights Committee, too, has urged all States to enact provisions against incommunicado detention.⁵⁹

D. The Turkish Government Should Give Proper Notice and Full Information Concerning Its Derogation From Law Protecting Human Rights

Both Article 15 of the ECHR and Article 4.3 of the ICCPR require notice of derogation from its provisions; both also require immediate reporting obligations to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe⁶⁰ and the Secretary-General of the United ⁵⁷ The Special Rapporteur reported that in 2006, “55 per cent of communications, relating to some 148 cases in 54 countries, dealt with violations of the human rights of judges, lawyers, prosecutors and court officials. Threats, intimidation and acts of aggression directed against lawyers accounted for 17 per cent of communications issued by the Special Rapporteur; the corresponding figure for judges and prosecutors was 4 per cent. Arbitrary detention and judicial harassment accounted for 26 per cent of communications concerning lawyers and 4 per cent of those concerning judges and prosecutors. Assassinations of lawyers, judges and prosecutors accounted for 4 per cent of the total number of communications.” U.N.G.A. A/62/207 para. 25.

⁶⁰ Specifically, Article 15, section 3 of the ECHR provides, “Any High Contracting Party availing itself of this right of derogation shall keep the Secretary General of the Council of Europe fully informed of the measures which it has taken and the reasons therefor. It shall also inform the Secretary General of the Council of Europe when such measures have ceased to operate and the provisions of the Convention are again being fully executed.”

Nations⁶¹ respectively. Notice must be given of the measures taken in derogation of law and the reasons for such action.⁶² Under Article 15, section 1 of the ECHR, states may take measures derogating from their obligations only “to the extent strictly required by the exigencies of the situation.”⁶³ Similarly, under Article 4.1 of the ICCPR, parties to the Covenant only “may take measures derogating from their obligations under the present Covenant to the extent strictly required by the exigencies of the situation.”⁶⁴

On July 24, 2016, the Turkish government did file with the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe a notice of derogation from the ECHR, which included a “Joint Declaration by the Grand National Assembly” and two “information notes.”⁶⁵ But this notice is inadequate both as to the provisions of law being derogated and the justifications.⁶⁶

Notably, the Turkish government has not given any notice to the United Nations Human Rights Committee of its plain derogation from the human rights protections set out in ICCPR.⁶⁷ The Turkish government’s breach of its obligations under the ICCPR, and its breach of the Covenant’s notice provisions, are seem clear.

It is appropriate to call upon the Turkish government to comply with its obligations under the ECHR to keep the Secretary General of the Council of Europe fully informed of the measures it has taken in derogation of the European Convention on Human Rights and the reasons justifying such derogation.⁶⁸

It is also appropriate to urge the Turkish government to comply with its obligations under the ICCPR to provide to the Secretary-General of the United Nations

⁶¹ Article 4.3 of the ICCPR, similarly, provides, “Any State Party to the present Covenant availing itself of the right of derogation shall immediately inform the other States Parties to the present Covenant, through the intermediary of the Secretary-General of the United Nations, of the provisions from which it has derogated and of the reasons by which it was actuated. A further communication shall be made, through the same intermediary, on the date on which it terminates such derogation.”

Conclusion

In recent years, the human rights situation in Turkey has been deteriorating, leading the US State Department to highlight abuses in its recent Country Reports on Human Rights Practices for 2015.⁷⁰ As stated in this Report, the then-current state of emergency in Turkey has led to numerous, serious ongoing violations of core rule of law principles. The current, ongoing, declared state of emergency in Turkey is, at a minimum, being applied loosely and liberally to the detriment of well-understood and well-recognized civil and political rights. The future of Turkey as a legitimate constitutional democracy is in grave doubt, as has been observed in the mass media.⁷¹

The voice of the American Bar Association needs to be heard in this time of crisis. Whenever the detention of persons without charge or access to counsel has been at issue, the Association has not hesitated to speak out.⁷² Here, literally thousands of judges have been arbitrarily suspended, detained and arrested without due process or indeed any just cause and the state of emergency declared by the Turkish government has resulted in extensive, serious, human rights abuses. Faced with this reality, the eyes of the world, quite properly, will be looking to our Association.
